Senior Activity Center, 2874 Shoal Crest

What type of city do we want to be? How we, as a community, answer this question will be central in shaping what the City of Austin's new Comprehensive Plan looks like.

Housing is one of the critical issue areas identified for Austin's Comprehensive Plan. And clearly, affordability is integral to any discussion of housing. How do we ensure that the idea of "all kinds of housing in all parts of town" is embraced as a community priority in the Plan? What are the connections of housing to other elements of the Comprehensive Plan? How do neighborhood planning, education, transportation, and other elements affect housing? Are there other elements to be considered when planning for housing?

The 6th Annual Housing Summit—presented in collaboration with Liveable City and AIA Austin—will explore these questions and more with a particular focus on:

- Understanding the Comprehensive Plan – Opportunities & Limitations
- What type of housing does Austin need as it grows and how are those housing needs incorporated into the Plan?
- What are the challenges to ensure affordable housing for all residents in all parts of town?
- How do we facilitate "integrated planning" for all parts of town that recognizes the interconnectivity of schools, jobs, services, health, transportation and housing?
